PREFACE

THE purpose of this handbook is to present the most useful facts about the writing, illustrating, editing, publishing, reviewing, collecting, selling, and preservation of American books from 1640 to 1940. Since newspapers and magazines are important adjuncts to the creative literary forces at work in America, they fall within the scope of this compendium and have received full treatment. For convenience the material has been arranged in dictionary form, with cross-reference to related subjects. Bibliographical references for further study are given throughout the handbook. With so wide a field to cover the entries are necessarily concise.

Author entries occupy the larger part of the handbook, but subject entries have not been slighted, as the most cursory examination of the following pages will reveal. Time and literary criticism have established certain American writers as major authors. Naturally these have been included, besides hundreds of minor authors about whom readers frequently discover that it is almost impossible to find information. For this reason American Authors and Books places special emphasis on obscure and neglected writers, presenting biographical and bibliographical facts about them where available.

The exact date of birth and death, place of birth, and the important books of each author are given, the latter being arranged chronologically by first edition dates. Editorships of books, newspapers and magazines are indicated. If the author is also an educator, the name of the subject taught, the name of the institution with which the author is connected, and the inclusive years of that connection are given. Biographies, bibliographical notes, and other pertinent bits of information are given. In addition to authors there are several hundred entries for editors, publishers, booksellers, librarians, printers, book collectors, presidents of the United States, national heroes, and famous characters about whom books have been written. Among the last named are such entries as Daniel Boone, John Paul Jones, Calamity Jane, Johnny Appleseed, Billy the Kid, and John Brown.

Establishing death dates for these hundreds of persons proved a difficult task. Many authors have passed from public notice, and their whereabouts are not known. The Dictionary of American Biography yielded many facts about deceased authors. Space does not permit us to make individual acknowledgments to the many men and women who contributed biographies to that scholarly work. The obituary pages of The New York Times were scanned for the years between the publication of the Dictionary of American Biography and the present compilation. Alumni publications of many colleges were also valuable sources of information.

Several hundred novels, plays, short stories, poems, essays, orations, songs, hymns, and non-fiction books which have contributed to our literary history, receive separate entries, with publication dates. Most of the novels and plays and important books have been briefly described. It is suggested that the reader look under the individual title entry as well as under the author entry, for in many cases a title merely mentioned under the author's name receives full treatment under the separate title entry. For instance, information about The House of the Seven Gables may be found under Nathaniel Hawthorne, under the title The House of the Seven Gables, under the character entry Pyncheon Family, and under Salem, Mass., the place associated with the novel. This practice of consulting every possible entry associated with a book or author will greatly increase the value of this book.

To aid those who remember the name of a particular character in a book but cannot recall the exact title or author, hundreds of characters are given separate entries. The entry is under the last name if both names are given, for instance under Sawyer, for Tom Sawyer. There are a few exceptions, such as Aunt Polly, which is alphabetized under Aunt, and Black Tom, alphabetized under Black. To distinguish fictional characters from real persons we have entered them in small type.

Over 700 magazines have been described, with dates of founding, important editors, contributors, etc. Since much of our literature made its first appearance in magazines it seems fitting that full attention be given them. The files of the Atlantic Monthly, North American Review, Harper's Monthly, Century, Scribner's Magazine, Southern Literary Messenger, and St. Nicholas, etc., contain many of the literary masterpieces of the past. Their more complete story has been told in Frank Luther Mott's scholarly work, A History of American Magazines, 3 v. (1938).

Over 400 newspapers have been described, not only newspapers of the larger cities, but the small-town newspapers which have existed for a hundred years or more. Old newspaper files, no matter how small the newspaper, are the starting points for any serious research in American life and letters. More and more students and writers are turning to these valuable files for local history. The best guide to newspapers is the Union List of Newspapers, edited by Winifred Gregory (1937).

Publishing firms and bookstores which have played such an important part in the development of American literature have been sadly neglected in our history books. Many of these publishing houses and bookstores have been active for over a century, but information about them is scant. The files of Publishers' Weekly contain brief histories of many of them, but these have never been collected into one book. American Authors and Books has made an effort to include as many of these firms as possible, and to give them adequate presentation.

For the same reason we have included numerous descriptive entries for book clubs; historical societies; libraries; learned bodies and associations which have devoted themselves to the collection and preservation of books and manuscripts, and the restoration of national shrines. Our literary heritage has been enriched by such organizations as the Massachusetts Historical Society, Grolier Club, American Antiquarian Society, American Bibliographical Society, Junto, American Library Association, American Historical Society, Library of Congress, The New York Public Library, Boston Public Library, and the Boston Athenæum. That Americans have the privilege of visiting the Old Manse, Craigie House, the Poe Cottage, Mount Vernon, the House of the Seven Gables, Gettysburg, Plymouth Rock, Independence Hall, Bunker Hill Monument, "Old Ironsides," Williamsburg, the Alamo, etc., is due almost entirely to the efforts of these literary and historical societies which have raised funds to restore and preserve them.

There has been an increasing interest in the regional aspects of our literature during recent years. Evidence of this may be found in the sectional novels and histories, and the many doctoral dissertations devoted to local history, customs, and literature. For the benefit of teachers, librarians, writers, and students, we have included over four hundred cities, states, regions, and places with literary associations, with lists of guidebooks, histories, novels, plays, and poems written about them. The reader is referred to such typical entries as Concord, Maine, Southwest, Chicago, New England, South, Williamsburg, Boston, San Francisco, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Virginia, Texas, Mississippi River, Hudson River, Cape Cod, Northwest Territory, Oregon Trail, The Hermitage, Greenwich Village, Beacon Hill, etc. It is suggested that readers consult all related subjects. For instance, material on the Rocky Mountains may be found not only under Rocky Mountains, but under Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Oregon Trail, the West, etc. Material on New York City may be found not only under New York City, but under New York State, Hudson River, Brooklyn, Washington Square, Gramercy Park, Greenwich Village, Broadway, etc. This is a particularly important rule to observe since the same books are not listed under each related entry. It is best to work from the smaller geographical area to the larger; for instance, Provincetown, Cape Cod, Massachusetts, New England.

For the use of writers and teachers many special lists have been included. The following are typical: dime novels, censorship, whaling, witchcraft, Mormons, children's books, pirates, circus, cowboys, Indians, the Negro, Civil War, World War, Pony Express, United States Military Academy, United States Naval Academy, scouts, sea, humorists, nature writers, utopias, Appleton, D., & Co. New York. Publishers. Founded in 1825 by Daniel Appleton, who opened a general store which featured books among other things. In 1831 he began to publish books. The first book published was Crumbs from the Master's Table, a book measuring three inches square. On Daniel Appleton's death in 1849, his four sons, headed by William H. Appleton, carried on the business and one of the landmarks of the house is Appleton's New American Cyclopaedia, edited by Charles A. Dana and George Ripley. This was followed by Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography, and Appleton's Picturesque America. Thirty-five million copies of Webster's Blue Back Speller were sold from 1855 to 1890. Appleton published the first American edition of Alice in Wonderland. In 1933 the Century Company, (q.v.) founded in 1881, was merged with D. Appleton & Co., to form the D. Appleton-Century Company. John W. Hiltman has been largely responsible for the modern phase of the firm, along with W. Morgan Shuster and Dana Ferrin who came into the firm through the Century Company merger. Among some of the early successes were the works of William Cullen Bryant: Westcott's David Harum; William H. Seward's Travels Around the World; the novels of Robert W. Chambers and David Graham Phillips. A popular series of novels was called Appleton's Town and Country Library, started in 1888, which finally reached 312 volumes. In the magazine field the firm issued Appleton's Journal (1869–81) (q.v.), and a house organ, Appleton's Literary Bulletin (1881–90). It also founded in May 1872 The Popular Science Monthly, which was taken over by McClure, Phillips & Company in 1900. See D. Appleton's The House of Appleton (1916).

Century Company, The. New York. Publishers. Founded 1881. This company is closely connected with Scribner's, for in 1870 Roswell Smith and Josiah Gilbert Holland founded Scribner's Monthly, published by an organization set up by Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers. Holland became editor, assisted by Richard Watson Gilder. A few books were published by this Scribner subsidiary, and in 1881 a new company was organized called The Century Company, the Scribner interests were purchased and the magazine changed to The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine. This magazine flourished under Gilder, and was printed by Theodore De Vinne. Its illustrations, under the guidance of its art director, Alexander W. Drake, set new standards of excellence. Most of the celebrated literary men and women of America were contributors over a period of years. The firm also published St. Nicholas Magazine (q.v.). One of the major works published by the Century Company was The Century Dictionary and Cyclopaedia. In 1933 the Century Company was merged with D. Appleton & Co., to form The Appleton-Century Co. Among the popular books published by The Century Company were: Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, by Alice Hegan Rice; Messer Marco Polo, by Donn Byrne; Daddy Long-Legs, by Jean Webster; Hugh Wynne, by S. Weir Mitchell; White Shadows in the South Seas, by Frederick O'Brien; A Vagabond Journey Around the World, by Harry A. Franck; and Abraham Lincoln, by Nicolay and Hay. The four presidents of The Century Company were Roswell Smith, 1881-92, Frank H. Scott, 1892-1912, W. W. Ellsworth, 1912-14, and W. Morgan Shuster, 1914-33, who became president of the D. Appleton-Century Company at the time of the merger. See The House of Appleton-Century, a brochure, published by the firm in 1936.

Harper & Brothers. New York. Publishers. The printing business of J. and J. Harper was started in 1817 by James Harper (1795-1869) and John Harper (1797-1875). The first book printed was Seneca's Morals, for Evert Duyckinck. Joseph Wesley Harper (1801-70) joined the firm in 1825; Fletcher Harper (1806-77) joined his three brothers in 1825. In 1833 the firm changed its name to Harper & Brothers. In 1850 Harper's Magazine was founded (q.v.), and in 1857 Harper's Weekly (q.v.). In 1867 came Harper's Bazar (q.v.) and in 1879, Harper's Young People. Always one of the largest New York publishing houses, it has issued thousands of books by leading American and European writers. Members of the Harper family had always headed the house, until 1931 when Cass Canfield became president. Lee Foster Hartman is vice president. In 1890 the educational department joined that of several other publishers to form the American Book Company. Included among Harper authors are Louis Adamic, Leonard Bacon, Robert Benchley, E. M. Delafield, Harry Emerson Fosdick, Hamlin Garland, Zane Grey, Thomas Hardy, Aldous Huxley, Clarence Buddington Kelland, Edna St. Vincent Millay, James Moffatt, Kirk Munroe, Albert Bigelow Paine, J. B. Priestley, James Harvey Robinson, Albert Payson Terhune, James Thurber, and Mark Twain. See J. C. Derby's Fifty Years Among Authors, Books and Publishers (1886); J. Henry Harper's The House of Harper (1912).

HARPER'S

man, since 1931. Novels by leading English writers ran serially in the early issues. American writers became more frequent contributors in later years. Its stories during the Civil War were outstanding, and its illustrations vied with those of Scribner's and Century for many years. One of the early successful serials was John S. C. Abbott's History of Napoleon Bonaparte. In recent years illustrations were dropped and the appearance of the magazine altered to fit the modern trend in magazines. Famous departments in the magazine have been "The Editor's Drawer," "The Editor's Table," "The Editor's Easy Chair," "The Editor's Study," conducted by such writers as E. P. Whipple, William Dean Howells, Samuel Osgood, John Kendrick Bangs, Theodore Sedgwick, Donald G. Mitchell, Charles Dudley Warner, Henry Mills Alden, George William Curtis, Edward S. Martin and more recently, Bernard DeVoto. John Chapin and Charles Parsons were noted art directors. See J. Henry Harper's The House of Harper (1912); historical articles in Harper's Monthly Magazine, May, 1900, and June, 1910; Henry Seidel Canby's Harper's Magazine (1925); A. R. Hyde's The Story of Harper's Magazine (1931); Frank L. Mott's History of American Magazines, v. 2 (1938).

Harper's Weekly. New York City. Founded 1857, by Fletcher Harper. Editors: Theodore Sedgwick, 1857-58; John Bonner, 1858-63; George William Curtis, 1863-92; Carl Schurz, 1892-94; Henry Loomis Nelson, 1894-98; John Kendrick Bangs, 1898-1901; George Harvey, 1901-13; Norman Hapgood, 1913-16. Noted for its woodcut illustrations of contemporary men and events. Historians find it a mine of factual and pictorial information. The best field artists and cartoonists supplied illustrations. Serial fiction was always a feature. Thomas Nast did his best cartoons for it, retiring in 1887. Dickens, Reade, Kipling, Henry James, Owen Wister, Richard Harding Davis, William Dean Howells and many other leading authors were contributors. In 1913 the magazine was sold to the McClure organization, and in 1916 was merged with The Independent.

Harper's Young People. New York City. Weekly. Founded 1879, by Harper & Bros. Kirk Munro was its first editor. Name changed in 1895 to Harper's Round Table; in 1897 it became a monthly. Expired 1899.
